PRACTICAL ANTHROPOLOGY brings together in a non-technical but creative way the resources of Christians oriented in a cross-cultural view of man and society. It is devoted to the development of more effective world-wide Christianity by the investigation, interpretation, and dissemination of the practical implications of anthropology and other culturally oriented studies.

PRACTICAL ANTHROPOLOGY is designed, for example, to be of benefit to missionaries and to students preparing for missions, in that it discusses the problems related to an effective communication of the Gospel across cultural barriers, and to the establishment of a church everywhere rooted in the culture of its people, but everywhere transforming that culture. In it the forms and practices of Western Christianity are also discussed cross-culturally and in the light of cultural dynamics. It provides a clearinghouse for the sharing of views among students of anthropology and related sciences who are concerned with anthropology and Christianity, and simultaneously a means by which they may convey relevant information and ideas to others.

The editors urge people from any field of endeavor to participate in the lively discussion we want PRACTICAL ANTHROPOLOGY to contain, by contributing articles and book reviews, by reacting to its contents through letters to the editor, by submitting problems which may become the basis for discussion, by drawing our attention to other relevant published materials, and by sending news about subscribers and events related to our goals.

Articles, book reviews, and other editorial matters should be addressed to William A. Smalley, 9 Foxhill Rd., Valhalla, N. Y. Business matters should be addressed to Mark H. Taylor, Box 307, Tarrytown, N. Y. Please do not address any correspondence to the Mexican address on the envelope.
